

Before delivering her lecture at the Mershon Center, Eva Bellin (left), associate professor of political science at City University of New York, Hunter College, and Bill Liddle (right), professor of political science at Ohio State, paused to talk to one of Liddle's students. Bellin's lecture at the Mershon Center for International Security Studies on May 18, 2010 was part of the Islam and Democracy Speaker Series organized by Bill Liddle.

Eva Bellin, associate professor of political science at City University of New York, Hunter College, lectured about, "Arbitrating Identity: Courts and the Politics of Religious-Liberal Reconciliation in the Middle East," on May 18, 2010 at the Mershon Center for International Security Studies.

Eva Bellin, associate professor of political science at City University of New York, Hunter College, lectured about, "Arbitrating Identity: Courts and the Politics of Religious-Liberal Reconciliation in the Middle East," as part of the Center's Islam and Democracy Speaker Series organized by Bill Liddle, professor of political science. Her lecture was co-sponsored by the Mershon Center for International Security Studies, Honors and Scholars, Department of Political Science, and the Middle East Studies Center.

Following her lecture, Eva Bellin, associate professor of political science at City University of New York, Hunter College, met with the honors seminar "Democracy in Muslim Majority Countries," taught by Bill Liddle (right), professor of political science at The Ohio State University. Bellin's lecture, "Arbitrating Identity: Courts and the Politics of Religious-Liberal Reconciliation in the Middle East," was part of the Mershon Center's Islam and Democracy Speaker Series, which is organized by Bill Liddle.